

Subject: Net Neutrality FCC Comment

To whom it may concern,

I am PhD student at the University Of Pennsylvania studying Computer Science. While net neutrality affects us all, I feel I must be the most vocal for I have the technical expertise to understand this issue better than the average person.

Therefore I am stating I am extremely against the Restoring Internet Freedom act. Keeping the internet neutral is of utmost importance. It is a necessity for most people: for work, school, and the number one source of information for people making informed decisions that affect their life. Restoring Internet Freedom is not helping the average person, instead it is another example of pro corporation rhetoric. Deregulation does not work, and I am saddened I must explicitly express my dissent for our law makers and regulators are not doing their job.

Net neutrality is an issue that affects all Americans as well as the rest of the world. I hope the U.S. can serve as a model for democracy, freedom, and fairness for all.
